SITE DESCRIPTION

A double-storey, rectangular building with two projecting Cape Revival-style gabled bays, salted brick plinth, and glazed veranda between bays. Hipped, dark tiled roof. The building is set back from the corner. The gate posts are in the same style.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This structure is a good example of a late Cape Dutch Revival style building. It has architectural interest, and because it "holds the corner" it has contextual significance. The site has social significance through its use as a rehabilitation centre. It has religious associations through its use and management by the Salvation Army.

GROUPING WITH OTHER SITES

EVIDENCE OF DEMOLITION

SITE HISTORY

The building is owned by the Salvation Army and has been used as a substance abuse treatment centre for about 70 years.

LANDSCAPE SIGNIFICANCE

There is a lawned forecourt expanse, with some mature trees around the edges of the site. A row of mature gums defines the edge of the site to the east.

CONTEXTUAL DESIGN

The building creates a positive corner at the intersection of the R304 and Old Paarl Road.
